Since merge sort is an Onlogn complexity I surmise that in-place merge sort should be the same thing since its only a bit faster than a standard mergesort. Best case would be the omega nlogn but that might be in the theoretical realm.
In place merge sort is not stable since the elements are rearranged according to the ordering operations on elements in the sorted area.